Original Letters of Eminent Literary Men Of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries Letters of eminent persons addressed to Dav. Hume Playful Letters A Study in Early Modern Alphabetic

University of Iowa Press Alphabetic letters are ubiquitous, multivalent, and largely ignored. Playful Letters reveals their important cultural contributions through Alphabetic—a new interpretive model for understanding artistic production that attends to the signifying interplay of the graphemic, phonemic, lexical, and material capacities of letters. A key period for examining this interplay is the century and a half after the invention of printing, with its unique media ecology of print, manuscript, sound, and image. Drawing on Shakespeare, anthropomorphic typography, figured letters, and Cyrillic pedagogy and politics, this book explores the ways in which alphabetic thinking and writing inform literature and the visual arts, and it develops reading strategies for the “letterature” that underwrites such cultural production. Playful Letters begins with early modern engagements with the alphabet and the human body—an intersection where letterature emerges with startling force. The linking of letters and typography with bodies produced a new kind of literacy. In turn, educational habits that shaped letter learning and writing permeated the interrelated practices of typography, orthography, and poetry. These mutually informing processes render visible the persistent crumbling of words into letters and their reconstitution into narrative, poetry, and image. In addition to providing a rich history of literary and artistic alphabetic interrogation in early modern Western Europe and Russia, Playful Letters contributes to the continuous story of how people use new technologies and media to reflect on older forms, including the alphabet itself.

As for the Diary of Archbishop Matthew, upon my second reading of it, I find it may be contracted into a very few useful and exemplary observations, which will be as a mirror to show the man, and with the addition of what is said by Wood, Fuller, &c. may increase our Biography; and therefore beg of you that it may lie by me a little, and so I shall send back your book safely, with those additaments of respect and honour to his memory which I am able to collect and make. His, and his wife's epitaphs, are the epitomes of the whole. As for your papers, I am not able to censure that of antiquities, in which sort of learning I am nobody. For the Life of your father, it is a most exemplary and curious thing; it may be, there are some things of economical concernment, which the world will not care for. A thing that often comes into my mind in reading and writing Lives, and particularly in that of Mr. Rayner's; how are men concerned, thought I, to know, in so large a narrative, how much Norwich and Lincoln strove for him? with many other things of the like importance. I must also plainly and friendly tell you, that as I am exceedingly pleased with that Life, so not so well satisfied with the poetry, or sermon of your worthy friend. It were to be wished that nothing that is ordinary slip out of our pens into the public: then you'll say, I must write nothing; I grant it, and can well lay it aside. However, mine being only used for transcribing, (as all historical things must be transcripts, not inventions,) I shall go on with my collections, hoping they may fall into the hands of some judicious disposer; and one or..

To Be Delivered in the Event of My Death

Darton Longman and Todd 'Every birthday I wonder if the year to come will be my last, and I'm filled with a certain element of surprise that I am actually still alive. 'The letters that follow are the things I really want to say in the event of my death. Some are things I haven't dared to say, felt confident enough to say, or just not got around to. They are to particular individuals - some of them are close friends, some are people I vaguely know, a couple are to people I have never even met. 'I'd be interested to hear their replies.'

My mission here is simply to recall and to record personal reminiscences of some of the great men who sowed and reaped a part of that great harvest garnered during the later half of the last century. In the history of English Literature and English Art, I believe it presents a rich yield that will not soon be equalled as the fruit of an equal measure of time, and I am prepared to accept lightly enough the criticism that probably awaits me, that the heroes whom I have worshipped are no longer the heroes of to-day. -- Pg. viii.

TO CAPTAIN SIR EDWARD BERRY. From a Copy in the Nelson Papers. December 5th, 1800. My dear Sir Edward, Many thanks for your letter: you know how I am fixed with Hardy, who could not get a Ship. Therefore, I write this Which he had captured at the Battle of St. Vincent. He did not, however, hoist his Flag until the 17th of January, 1801. Letters Which Have Appeared in the Banner of the Constitution, Addressed to the Editor (Classic Reprint)

Forgotten Books Excerpt from Letters Which Have Appeared in the Banner of the Constitution, Addressed to the Editor Dear Sir The cause of Free Trade ought not to escape the serious consideration of every intelligent man, whether he be in or out of the National Legislature. The enemies of the Tariff are rapidly increasing in every section of the United States, and I rejoice to hear that a revision of it occupies some part of the precious time of Congress. I am but an humble citizen, in private life, and devoted to the cultivation of the soil; but were I a member of that honorable body, I should conceive it to be a paramount duty to use my utmost efforts to assist in effecting a repeal of it, and thereby yield to the voice of my fellow-citizens, which, from every part of the Union, calls loudly for justice! I am personally acquainted with many sensible and worthy men, who, on the passage of the Tariff Law of 1852, were among its warmest friends, but are now convinced of their error. Truth is powerful, and must prevail. They are indeed truly great who can, by a noble triumph over their feelings, subdue their prejudices and for this I honor and respect them. We are all liable to err, and are told by an eminent writer, that there is no doctrine so false, but it may be intermixed with some truth. Laws are enacted for the preservation of our political rights and moral welfare; but whatever legislative measure militates against the best interests of the people, must weaken the ties of morality. I am by no means inimical to domestic manufactures; but a law which has for its object the protection of manufactures, to the injury of agriculture and commerce, must be productive of perjury and smuggling, and injure that very class it was intended to serve. How unworthy is this avaricious and contracted policy of the Government of an enlightened people. Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, auri sacra fames! Bhagat Singh WHY I AM AN ATHEIST? (Other Letter)

Prabhat Prakashan Bhagat Singh (1907 - 23 March 1931) was an Indian socialist revolutionary whose two acts of dramatic violence against the British in India and execution at age 23 made him a folk hero of the Indian independence movement. Bhagat Singh was an outstanding revolutionary and martyr of the Indian anti-colonial movement. He represented the youth who were dissatisfied with Gandhian politics and groped for revolutionary alternatives. Bhagat Singh studied the European revolutionary movement and was attracted to anarchism and communism. He became a confirmed atheist, socialist and communist. He realised that the overthrow of British rule should be accompanied by the socialist reconstruction of Indian society and for this political power must be seized by the workers. Bhagat Singh and B.K. Dutt enunciated their understanding of revolution in a statement made in connection with the Assembly Bomb case on 6th June, 1929: 'By Revolution we mean that the present order of things, which is based on manifest injustice must change. Producers or labourers, in spite of being the most necessary element of society, are robbed by their exploiters of their labour and deprived of their elementary rights. The peasant who grows corn for all, starves with his family; the weaver who supplies the world market with textile fabrics, has not enough to cover his own and his children's bodies; masons, smiths and carpenters who raise magnificent palaces, live like pariahs in the slums. The capitalists and exploiters, the parasites of society, squander millions on their whims.'

The Goodbye Letters

Observations for My Children

Dear Malka and Levi, As I start this project, you are little children of five and seven. You are beautiful. Perfect in your enthusiasm, openness, unfettered love, vulnerability, engagement and shocking sense of self. Despite deriving from the same gene pool, you are unique individuals, special in your various attributes, and already life has delivered you deeply divergent experiences, which each of you have accepted and adopted in stride. I am forty two, and while I am certain I have much more to learn from life, I feel compelled to document what I believe I know today, with the simultaneous goal of helping you understand me and, potentially, helping you understand yourselves and the world around you. Why am I doing this now? Why am I compelled to spend my commute home or the occasional empty long plane ride writing a paragraph about my life and how I view the world? Clearly there is an element of ego involved - I feel like I've figured some things out and, in believing that you might find my insights valuable, I'm validating myself by definition. This is not a humble endeavor. But I think there is probably something darker driving me, a recognition of my own mortality - that approximately half of my life is already over - and the fear that if I were to die today I would leave you in the lurch not just physically and emotionally, but spiritually and intellectually. I wouldn't get a chance to teach you from my mistakes and insights. To, at the very least, put forward a few ideas that could help you form your own value system. To improve, even if slightly, your chances of achieving that which I wish for you above all else: happiness, love and peace. Please forgive me in advance for cliché and pedantic rhetoric. This book is predicated on the belief that I have discovered monumental insights, which of course is untrue. But beneath the postulating and self-affirmation, if you look closely you'll find something that is true: this is my journey, and it has worked for me. Ultimately, in asking you to read this book, I'm asking you to take your own journey. Actively. Engaging the world around you and reaching to discover your soul. In your own way. I love you both, and I will forever. Papa

Memoirs of the Late Reverend Theophilus Lindsey, M.A

Including a Brief Analysis of His Works; Together With Anecdotes and Letters of Eminent Persons, His Friends and Correspondents: Also a General View of the Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine in England

Forgotten Books Excerpt from Memoirs of the Late Reverend Theophilus Lindsey, M.A: Including a Brief Analysis of His Works; Together With Anecdotes and Letters of Eminent Persons, His Friends and Correspondents: Also a General View of the Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine in England and America IT was in November, 17 73, that this venerable man, Theophilus Lindsey, when over fifty years Of age, and in the enjoyment of a rich living in the Church of England, surrounded also by many friends, and with the certain prospect of a bishopric, resigned all the comforts of an elegant home, and all chances of preferment, for the sake of what he esteemed to be Christ's truth and a good conscience. He became a Dissenter when dissent was very much despised, and Dissenters generally shunned. He also openly avowed his Unitarian views when these sentiments were nearly everywhere abhorred. From a commanding sense of duty he left the Church when he knew not where to find a home for himself and wife; and sold his library and some other effects to supply for a time the necessaries of life. In 17 74 he came from the North to London, and founded Essex-street Chapel - probably the first distinctly named Unitarian congregation in England. And now, after the lapse of one hundred years, we confidently affirm that Lindsey's theological views are becoming daily more widely known and honoured; and we are inclined to believe they will remain as a pyramid for ever on the landscape of religious truth, to guide into all truth; while his integrity, like a star, will lead onward the theological inquirer to be sincere, not to palter with words in a double sense, or to tamper with conscience. It is surely better to suffer affliction for what we esteem to be truth, than to enjoy the emoluments or positions of dishonesty. This reprint is now published to advance the highest moral and religious interests of society at the suggestion of Mr. Samuel Sharpe, of Highbury, London, whose zeal for the Unitarian Christian faith is only surpassed by his admiration of the sincere and upright of all denominations. It is possible that this volume may induce other members of the Unitarian Church to republish, in a cheap form, some valuable religious works which are little known to the present generation. The best monument that any one can leave behind - next to the memory Of a good life - is a good book that may reach the homes of all our people. Robert spears.
